I have a professional (advanced) level of English language exam (1991); while the German and the Russian language knowledge comes from the secondary school studies.

In the Secondary School I was a student of the Special English Language Class (1971-1975), then I started my technical degree studies at the Chemical University of Veszprém, from 1976.

After the University, during my professional career I always made use of my English language knowledge. In my jobs, during the last decades, I always had to use the English language. Even at the University of Miskolc, where I worked as a Lecturer, I was a teacher of Chemistry in English language for the foreign students, and parallel, I also taught Technical English language for all the students.

In later years (during the 90's) I had a Limited Partnership, and I took several language groups over to the British Isles, for practising the language, being with host families all around the four countries: England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland.

In the meantime, I continuously took part in several industrial projects, in translations and interpretations (plant commissioning, software applications within industrial circumstances, etc..)

From 1999 I went to work into the business sector, where I had several jobs (see below).

However, during these years, I also participated in lots of conferences, where I had to do translations, but simultaneous interpretations, as well.
